THE ENTEGRIS/MYKROLIS MERGER: FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Overview of the Merger

What did we announce today?

Briefly stated, we announced that Entegris and Mykrolis have agreed to combine in a merger-of-equals transaction. When the transaction is completed—which we expect will occur in the third calendar quarter—the combined enterprise will be the leading global provider of materials integrity management products and services to the semiconductor, microelectronics and other high-technology industries.

What is this merger all about?

It’s about combining two strong, successful companies to create the global leader in materials integrity management. The new Entegris will focus on purifying, protecting and transporting critical materials—such as liquids, gases, wafers and components—used in the semiconductor, microelectronics and other high-tech industries. The new Entegris will be operationally and financially strong, with significant growth opportunities. Bottom line: new Entegris will be an even better partner to customers and suppliers, an exciting, dynamic, growth-oriented environment for employees, and a company well-positioned to build value for its shareholders.

What will some of the strengths of the combined company be?

We’ll have many strengths! Here are some of them:

- best-in-class, complementary technologies
- leading-edge R&D 100% focused on Materials Integrity Management
- unparalleled expertise in materials and environments

- a broad range of products, systems and solutions for the entire value chain—including, in semiconductors, every step of the manufacturing process from raw wafer to finished device
- a proven and successful management team
- a diverse, blue-chip customer base
- a global footprint
- a rock-solid balance sheet
- a world-class service organization
- a values-driven culture

What particular strengths do Entegris and Mykrolis, respectively, bring to the table?

Entegris’ expertise is in protecting and transporting critical materials used in semiconductor, microelectronics and other high-technology industries from production to consumption. Mykrolis’ expertise is in controlling microcontamination in the semiconductor manufacturing process through the filtration, purification and handling of process fluids and chemicals. Both companies have a direct role in helping semiconductor, microelectronics and other manufacturers of high-technology products lower defect rates and improve yields.

What makes this time the right time to do this deal? What drove the timing?

It is always the right time to do a deal that makes as much strategic, operational, technological and financial sense as this one does.

Operational Questions

Beyond the executives mentioned in the press release, who will be on the combined company’s senior management team?

It’s really too soon to say. Operational decisions of that sort will be made in due course by the integration team, on which both companies will be represented, and which will make such decisions based on what makes the most sense for the combined enterprise, its customers and its shareholders. We would expect to announce the rest of the members of the new Entegris’ management team at the time of, or perhaps shortly before, completion of the merger.

What are Entegris’, and Mykrolis’, principal employee locations?

Entegris is headquartered in Chaska, Minnesota, and has five main employee locations: Chaska; Kulim, Malaysia; Colorado Springs, Colorado; Bad Rappenau, Germany; and Yonezawa, Japan. Mykrolis’ five principal employee locations are Billerica and Franklin, Massachusetts; Allen, Texas; San Diego, California; and Yonezawa, Japan.

What are Mykrolis and Entegris doing to inform our respective customers about the transaction?

Representatives of both companies will be actively communicating with our respective customers today and in the days ahead to discuss the transaction and how it will benefit them.

How long do you expect the operational integration process to take?

Because there is very little overlap between our two companies, the process should be smooth and seamless. Assuming the transaction is completed, as expected, in the third quarter, it should be substantially or entirely completed by the end of this year.

Will Entegris and Mykrolis begin any joint marketing programs prior to completion of the merger?

No. Until the transaction receives regulatory and shareholder approval, both companies will continue to pursue their respective marketing programs and other business activities exactly as before.

Who are the principal customers of Entegris and Mykrolis?

The top customers include semiconductor OEMs such as Applied Materials and Tokyo Electron; semiconductor device makers such as Intel, Samsung and TSMC; semiconductor growers such as Siltronic and MEMC; and electronic component companies such as Seagate.

Employee QuestionsWhen will I know what impact, if any, the transaction will have on me, my job, my responsibilities etc.?

As the release indicates, the companies have identified approximately $15 million in annual cost savings, to be achieved principally through the rationalization of duplicative administrative functions and facilities. It is expected that approximately 5 percent of the combined company's workforce will be affected by the merger. Necessary staff reductions will be achieved through normal attrition wherever possible. As soon as more specific information is available, we will share it with the affected individuals. Meanwhile, it is very important for every employee, and for the company, that all of us continue to do our jobs, and serve our customers, exactly as before.

How will it be decided which positions are eliminated?

All operational decisions affecting Entegris and Mykrolis employees will be made in due course by the integration team, on which both companies will be represented. Those decisions will be based on careful consideration of what makes the most sense for the combined enterprise, its customers and its shareholders. As soon as decisions are made, they will be promptly communicated to the affected employees.

What sort of severance benefits will employees whose jobs are eliminated receive? Will the company provide enhanced outplacement services?

Our Human Resources team and senior management will be reviewing our plans for such benefits and services in the weeks ahead. Details will be provided to affected employees in due course.

If my job is eliminated, can I apply for another job at the combined company?

It's our long-standing policy to allow any employee to apply for any open position.

As an Entegris employee, should I contact my counterpart at Mykrolis to begin discussing transition plans?

No. Until the transaction is completed, both companies will continue to pursue their respective business activities as separate, stand-alone enterprises, exactly as before.

What should employees do during the transition period before this merger is completed?

Employees should continue to do their jobs and serve our customers exactly as they did before.

Investor Questions

When will the two companies hold their respective special shareholders' meetings to approve the deal?

That will depend on when our joint proxy statement/prospectus goes effective and when we clear regulatory review. We hope to hold our respective shareholders' meetings and complete the transaction in the third calendar quarter.

When can I buy stock in the new company?

Because this is a stock-for-stock deal, an investment in either company's stock is, in effect, an investment in the "new" company, assuming the transaction is completed.

What should I do with my Entegris shares?

Right now, you do not need to do anything. Detailed information and instructions will be sent to all Entegris and Mykrolis shareholders in due course.

When will I receive proxy materials to vote on the deal?

You will be receiving such materials in due course, and will have sufficient time to carefully review them before voting on the transaction or taking any other action.
